A Steel Mail Car.

The first all-steel mail car, built and run on the Pennsylvania road, left New York yesterday for Washington, to be inspected here today by the Postmaster General. This car is larger than the standard car heretofore used, and contains nothing to burn. It will not telescope in collisions. It will not be the means of reasonably assuring the prompt and horrible death of the postal clerks whenever an accident occurs.

The United States, approximately, pays for each mail car in rentals, in something less than two years, according to current statement of the figures. It ought, for such a rental, get the best; and the all-steel car, lighted with electricity, is the best yet devised.

Somebody has figured that the chances of violent death in the service of the United States were the greatest in the railroad postal service, with the army and navy following! Perhaps it was an exaggeration, but it suggests emphatically the grim fact that Uncle Sam has given all too little thought to the postal cierks, and that a corporation which, for profit, permitted its men to work under the conditions that surround our postal clerks would be execrated by the whole nation.

FINE STUDENT $10;

NEW ORLEANS, March 11 .- Powell Crichton, of Minden, La., a student at Harvard University, has been fined $10, with costs, totaling $500, for refusing to work in the streets of his home town, the supreme court having dismissed his appeal for lack of jurisdiction. Crichton recently returned home on vacation to find that an erratic alderman had obtained legislation forcing every able bodied inhabitant to shovel dirt and improve the streets of Minden two days out of each month. He resisted this law on the ground that he sisted this law on the ground that he was a student temnorarily absent from college, and therefore came under the provisions of the act which exempts teachers and pupils from road duty. The case was decided against him in the lower court and he met with no better success in the supreme tribunal. Crichton will have to pay fifty times the amount of the fine because of court costs involved.

withdrew another immense acreage, and brought the total up to about 60,000,000 acres.

Necessarily there was not time to make thorough examination of these lands and determine exactly which ones ough to be held out. The President consulted people at the Interior Department and Chief Forester Pinchot prepared, in the main, the list of lands withdrawn. The Western Senators who later made bitter assault on Mr. Pinchot indulged a good deal of sarcasm about this feature, saying the lists were made up from reports to Mr. Pinchot of his forest rangers, who knew nothing about the coal-bearing possibilities of the fands, and simply include everything that they suspected might contain coal of no commercial value, some contain coal of no commercial value, some contain sone coal at all.

The explanation of this generosity about making the withdrawals is that the President followed the advice of Mr. Pinchot instead of taking that of the geologists of the Government. The latter had pretty accurate information as to what were coal lands and what were coal lands and what the tenter had pretty accurate information as to what were coal lands and what the tenter had pretty accurate information as to what were coal lands and what the tenter is no possibility of it being the president followed the advice of the geologists of the Government.
